SUNDAY, Sept. 30

Notwithstanding the unusually wide and erratic fluctuations in last week's stock market, the net results in price changes were not se extensive as would have been inferred with each day's fluctuations in view. Notwithstanding also that the market has been described as unsettled and always as irregular, as a matter of fact the large majority of the stock list closed on Saturday materially above the average level at the close of business the week before. The daily dealings during the week attained a fair degree of activity in contrast with those of the summer months, although in respect of volume the trading is still far below last year's averages. The wide fluctuations in the market and the noted comparatively small results testify to professional character of the dealings at large. The general situation comprises reveral circumstances the developments in which appeal strongly to speculators and cause them to operate aggressively on either side of the market and to change their position very quickly, upon any appearances of alteration in the controlling circumstances. While the dealings in the week's market were prepon-deratingly for professional account, actual outside interest on both sides of the account was by no mean suspended. Indeed, with the course of the week there was more genuine and heavy liquidation from sources outside of the Stock Exchange than for a long time, and there was also noted an absorption of stocks which, while to a certain degree speculative in character, cannot nevertheless be classed as professional in the sense the term is employed in Wall Street. In regard, however, to the sales and purchases of a non-professional character, referred to, it may be noted that the liquidation has, according to credible reports, been for the account of a number of large operators whose financial resources were impaired, or who, for one reason or another, had abandoned hope of any early and substantial change in the long prevailing market conditions. Any extensive outside buying of securities in a stock market like the present is unquestionally for the account of individuals who are indifferent to transient fluctuations and who are also uninfluenced by the many ephemeral circumstances which appeal so strongly to the average Apprehension as to the result of the Presidential election this year, however unreasonable, must be regarded as inevitable; and it is to that chiefly that the long prevailing apathy in the speculative and investment markets is owing. The course of the developments in and the probabilities of the Presidential campaign are discussed from every point of view and the tremendous importance of the issue being commonly recognized, it is only natural that enterprise should be checked, and that even in purely speculative ventures activity should be replaced by caution. While on the one hand the success of the Republican party means simply that the present commercial development of the country will continue along clear and stable lines, and while in view of the circumstances of the situation there is no reason to expect a wild outburst of what is called bullish enthusiasm in the event of Republican success, it is recognized that the triumph of Bryanism means commercial and financial disaster, the extent of which would be incalculable. In short, all of the upbuilding, the progress, the solidification and the financial and commercial rehabilitation of the past four years would in consequence be undermined to an extent that would threaten a collapse from which it would take the country years to emerge. Wall Street, indeed, in the narrower sense of the term, that is, the brokers upon the Stock Exchange and their speculative clients, would probably suffer less than any other class of the business community. Violent price fluctuations would certainly, for an in-definite period, be assured; and while the ordinary risks of an extra-hazardous callir would be increased, it is still, nevertheles probably true that the class upon which the brunt of Populistic vituperation has been lavished would for a certain length of time gainers by reason of Democratic success. Fortunately, however, all the available ind cations of value point to a contrary issue of th campaign, and fortunately only five weeks of uncertainty in this regard While the political situation must remain th underlying controlling influence in financi a Tairs until its final settlement, two other matte have this week contested with it in intere and discussion. These were the labor trouble in the Eastern Pennsylvania coal fields and th contracting money market. Absorbed by the several subjects, the financial or at least the speculative community has devoted scant attention to other routine, but really essential and fundamental factors bearing upon market values, such, for example, as the many wonderfully strong annual statements of railway traffic for the ended fiscal year which have been submitted. or to the distinct evidences of improvement in domestic trade conditions or the more striking developments in the foreign exchange market. The strike of the anthracite coal miners, being superimposed upon the political situation, naturally assumed a particularly managing aspect Its multifold significance was however quickly recognized and appreciated. Efforts were at once instituted to bring the trouble to a termination, and, in view of the standing and the capabilities of the persons who have undertaken to achieve this end, an eventually successful is sue can hardly be doubted. An early settlemen of the matter was deferred by reason of the recalcitrant attitude assumed by parties of both sides of the dispute and this complicated the solution of an already singularly complex question. It would at this time however be difficult to conceive of any single subject o beneficent importance of equal value to an equitable settlement of the strike of the apthracite coal miners. Saturday's bank statement showed a further heavy reduction in the banks' reserves, as had been foreshadowed in the movements of currency during the week. Notwithstanding however, the outflow of currency from New York, the generally predicted advance in interest rates has failed to materialize, and something approaching a stable equilibrium between the requirements of borrowers and the resources of lenders appears to have been struck. It is obvious, however, that the reserves of the New York banks cannot be intrenched upon as they have been during the past three weeks without a very decided reflection appearing in the rates for money, unless they are replenished from other quarters. Current indications in the foreign exchange market point to that quarter of the situation as the most likely one from which aid may be expected. Notwithstanding the comparative ease in the local money market and the gradual further rise in European discount, foreign exchange deined steadily throughout the week, the decline amounting to fully 1 cent in the pound on sterling and to 1/4 per cent. on Continental While the decline in the exchange market resulted most directly from the heavy offerings of bills against cotton exports, there can be little doubt that the course of that marke was further influenced by the contingencie of the local money market. The interesting mestion at the present time in the international exchanges is in regard to the possible effect upon the European money and security marets of the transfer hither in the form of gold shipments of a part of this country's foreign credits now employed abroad. Great uneasiacss is reported at every European financial entre, and particularly at London and Berlin, as to the consequences of such a movement. At the same time, should the necessities of the New York money market-require the calling n of a part or of the whole of America's credit palance, Europe cannot refuse to honor our trafts, no matter what may be the consequence apon the speculative or industrial markets of Financial conditions are always in a state of flux and change, and unforeseen developnents continually arise to disturb carefully repared calculations. It would neverthe ess appear that with the probably early adustment of the Pennsylvania labor troubles and the inevitable removal of uncertainty as regards the year's political situation the financial outlook will be strong and fairly o More active money market conditions may probably will prevail, but these not only d imply distressing contraction, but it is diff to see why the latter needs to be appreher The most pronounced pessimists, and, a speculative standpoint, the most aggre bears upon the stock market, avowedly their contentions wholly upon the pol uncertainty and the labor troubles; and will soon be deprived of these argum No one can reasonably question the inh strength and soundness of the conditions derlying the American security market. it is to be hoped that after November 6 conditions will be permitted to enjoy sway.
